

GOVERNOR STILL MAINTAINS THE HOUSE CONTROL

First Indecisive Skirmishes Concluded in House and Senate

NO REAL TEST YET

Hot Battle Looked For When Senate Swings Into Action

By Leo V. Dolan
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
HARRISBURG, Nov. 18.—With the first indecisive skirmishes concluded in Senate and House over Gov. Gifford Pinchot's 15-phase unemployment relief program, three salient facts emerged from the background of political oratory and sincere debate today. In the order of their importance, they are:

1. The Governor's comprehensive program is in danger of being scuttled by leaders of the "organization" faction.

2. An obstacle-studded road faces the reporting by the House Ways and Means Committee of the cigarette-gasoline-billboard tax bills unless they are amended to conform with the ideas of House members who admit frankly that, so far as their home districts are concerned, "we're hanged if we do, and hanged if we don't."

3. Despite reports that added subjects might be added to the program by the Governor in out-maneuvering hostile influences in both branches, the Executive apparently intends to stick to his guns and push the entire original program with all means at his command.

The Governor still maintains control of the House and is expected to be able to whip recalcitrant members into line. There has been no definite test of strength, however, and anti-administration leaders profess to see a trend in their favor in the undercurrent of opposition to the executive's tax measures that already has made its appearance in the lower branch.

So far the Senate has maintained a coy attitude toward the entire program, filling the involuntary role of an aloof spectator. Since all revenue-raising legislation must, under the Constitution, originate in the House, the Senate may take no action until the relief measures are sifted through the House legislative mill.

That the Governor's program faces a hot battle when the Senate finally swings into action is a foregone conclusion. The State organization and the powerful Philadelphia group have declared themselves in favor of "home rule" in the disbursement of funds collected through local taxation and Senator Williams, Huntingdon, has set forth a plan providing for such disbursement.

The Governor's proclamation convening the session emphasized the proposed creation of a State Unemployment Relief Commission to supervise the distribution of relief funds.

The House Ways and Means Committee left the Capitol last night with no action taken on the proposed tax on gasoline, cigarettes and billboards. It was evident that the House membership is far from being unanimously in favor of the three excise measures. Despite the Governor's disavowal, House leaders believe he may be forced to wield the "big stick" or take advantage of the opinion of the Attorney General that the executive may amend his original call for the special session at any time.

It was pointed out that a compromise might be effected by reducing the proposed gasoline tax increase from two cents to one cent per gallon. To effect such compromise, however, it would be necessary for the Governor to add an agenda to his call since the tax bill has been drafted in conformity with the Governor's proclamation.

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 18.—With the 75 workers of the Red Cross distributing pledge cards and explaining the cause of the Mayor's Unemployment and Relief Committee, the actual work of raising funds to carry on during the winter months has begun.

The Red Cross workers, at a recent meeting, voted to do this work in conjunction with the work of soliciting memberships in their own organization. The Red Cross drive began on Armistice Day. Each worker first presents the Red Cross plea and then takes up with the same family the matter of donating to the relief of unemployment in Morrisville. All pledge cards which are left by the Red Cross workers will be collected by other workers appointed by the Mayor's Committee.

The pledge cards provide for the subscribing of 1 per cent of the donor's wages for a period of 20 weeks or one day's pay for the entire period or a cash contribution. The money may be paid weekly or monthly. The committee will have the funds collected regularly.

Already the teachers of the public schools, the employees of the Vulcanized Rubber Company, the Robertson Art Tile Company and the Post Office have signed up to give 1 per cent of their wages to this relief. EXCHANGE CLUB TO CONDUCT MOCK TRIAL

Great Excitement Prevails Among the Club Membership

ATTORNEYS TO BATTLE

The greatest excitement prevails among the members of the Bristol Exchange Club. Some months ago, the entertainment committee began the publication of a club bulletin, under the name of "The Bristol Exhilarator." The name of the editor was not revealed, and hiding behind this screen of secrecy, he has razed the members of the club without mercy.

At last several of the members plucked up sufficient courage to bring charges of "defamation of character" against the editor. The trial is set for tomorrow evening in the Elks' Home, following the usual club dinner.

Judge James Guy of the Municipal Court, will try the case. He will have associated with him as associate justices, Dr. George T. Fox and David Landreth. Pemberton Minster and William H. H. Pine will represent the prosecution and the Rev. George Hess and J. Wesley Spencer will act as counsel for the defense.

Rev. Hess has announced that he has discovered a most serious technicality which will invalidate the charges, and accordingly, he will ask the judges to quash the proceedings. The attorneys for the prosecution are worried, but are determined to make a desperate fight to prevent Rev. Hess from carrying his plans to a successful conclusion.

From present indications, the trial will be furiously contested from the very beginning. The editor has many supporters, who believe that the bulletin has been a helpful force, in building up the club, while there are many others, whom the editor has "razed," who would welcome the opportunity to square matters with him.

And so as the trial approaches, the membership is divided in its sympathies. What will be the outcome, no one will hazard an opinion at this time. Roy Fry, chairman of the Police Committee of Borough Council, has issued instructions for Superintendent of Public Safety McGee and Chief of Police Jones, both to be present, in case any serious trouble may arise.

Games were played. To Joseph Britton was awarded first prize; and to William Lynn, the "booby" prize for the donkey game.

Music and dancing were enjoyed.

Those who were invited: Misses Elizabeth Berger, Doris Connors, Marion Dugan, Margaret Flanagan, Alma Leinheiser, Hannah McDevitt, Myrtle McCoy, Marie McGonigle, Gertrude Snyder, Jennie Slater, Rose Mulholland, Joseph Britton, John Cole, William Dougherty, Edward Gaffney, Herman Leinheiser, William Lynn, Alfred McIvaine, Edward McDevitt, Maurice McCurry, Raymond McCoy, Francis Nealis, William Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer White, Mr. and Mrs. John Donohue, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Wonder of Nature Has Been Duplicated by Man

Another wonder of nature has been duplicated by man. The chameleon, with its ability to match its surroundings, has been found a counterpart in gasoline.

According to Nicholas Listorti, operator of the Bristol and Harriman Rusk-Lehigh stations, Mobilgas engineers have recently developed climatic-control, and outstanding scientific achievement. Mobilgas now will instantly adjust itself to all weather conditions.

Heat or cold, rain or snow, high or low altitudes make no difference. Mobilgas, with Climatic-Control, meets them all, giving a uniformly smooth performance under each condition. Climatic-control, say engineers, also solves the problem of quick starting.

SHOW PROCEEDS TO BE USED FOR CHARITY CAUSE

ON NOVEMBER 23

Funds to Be Placed in Central Relief Committee Treasury

A monster moving picture benefit is to be given in Bristol at the Grand Theater and all of the proceeds are to be donated to the Central Relief Committee of Bristol, according to an announcement made today by Edward Lynn, manager of the theater.

The benefit is to be given Monday afternoon, November 23rd, at 2.30 o'clock and not one cent of costs are to be deducted from the proceeds. Every penny is to be turned over to the Central Committee.

The week of November 18th to November 25th has been set aside as National Motion Picture Week and is to be observed throughout the entire nation. During this week every theater in the country will stage a benefit performance. Such benefit is in no way to interfere with the regularly scheduled performances of the houses.

Mr. Lynn yesterday consulted with both Clifford L. Anderson and Thomas Scott, secretary-treasurer of the Central Relief Committee, and received their approval for the show.

The admission will be 25 cents for children and 35 cents for adults and all of the money taken in at the box office will be given to the Central Committee.

A big feature picture, "The Star Witness" with Walter Huston, Charles "Chic" Sale, Dickey Moore, Frances Starr, Grant Mitchell, Ralph Ince, Sally Blane and Robert Elliott will be shown.

In addition to the feature there will be an "Our Gang" comedy entitled "Big Ears," and a cartoon comedy, "The Jungle Jam." A Movietone News picture will be included. In fact it is to be the same program as will be given Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Walter Huston, who plays the part of the district attorney in "The Star Witness," the Warner Bros. production, is known as one of the most accomplished and versatile actors on either stage or screen. On the latter he first came into prominence in "Gentlemen of the Press."

Huston is a Canadian by birth, and is of Scotch and Irish parentage. His father was a contractor, and young Huston studied to be an engineer. At the age of eighteen, however, the acting idea became too strong. After a period with a Toronto stock company he ran away, riding the brake beams to New York. After half staving there for some time he finally landed a three-line part in Richard Mansfield's company, promptly bungled his lines the first night and was fired. He dogged it along in acting until 1905, when he gave up the stage and returned to Toronto to follow engineering. Meanwhile he had been married.

The call of the stage was too strong, however, and after four years he returned, organizing the vandyville team of "Whipple & Huston." He remained in vandyville for twelve years. His break came in a peculiar way. Realizing he was getting nowhere in vandyville he decided to go in for an elaborate act. He invested $5,000 in stage equipment, and hired a cast. The Keith people would only give him $1,250 for the act. He needed $1,500 a week to make it pay. Just then the Shuberts were making their abortive attempt at "vaude," and they offered him twenty weeks at $1,750 a week. He took it, but later was blacklisted by the Keith people.

He was very hard up when he happened to see a play that a friend was to produce. He read it and felt that he could play the title role. It was "Mr. Pitt." He got the role, and was a star overnight. "The Fountain," "Congo," "The Barker," "Elmer the Great," "The Commodore Marries," and "Desire Under the Elms," followed.

Then pictures claimed him. Following "Gentlemen of the Press," he appeared in "The Lady Lies," "The Virginian," "The Bad Man," "Abraham Lincoln," "The Ruling Voice," and "The Star Witness."

COMMON TONGUE

Secretary John Daniels, of the English-Speaking Union of the United States, is sure that peoples or nations having a common language are less apt to disagree than those that are alien in speech. But he fails to cite an instance where a common language has ever averted a bloody conflict.

Indeed, that mutual understanding which is supposed to assist in composing differences sometimes aggravates a feeling of watchful distrust into a wrathful desire to fight to the death. Some of the bloodiest of England's wars have been fought between her own children on her own soil. The long debates which preceded the American Revolution and the Civil War, instead of paving the way for agreement intensified the spirit of discord.

Those who call English their mother tongue do not know what a Frenchman or Prussian is saying about them and do not care. But cuss a man in his own language and he will care.

It could be said that the recent political battle should have been waged without casualties either in cracked or hot heads or hurt feelings, but then some penetrating fellow would suggest that Georgia "crackers," New Yorkers, Californians and Kansans do not speak a common language.

COMMUNITY GROWTH

Busy factories are as vital to the city and town as good crops and fair market prices are vital to the agricultural section. The manufacturing community—few American communities do not have one or more industries—does not appreciate the value of its factories until a business depression shuts them down and puts their many employees out of work.

Formerly the inland community was a group of houses, a store or two, a church and a school. Its purpose seemed to have been little more than a meeting and shopping place for nearby farmers and their families. Eventually, as the nation drifted toward industrialism, factories were established in these little centers of population. These industries took what native labor they found and acted as a magnet for the surplus labor in the surrounding area. The community grew and new industries and more labor came.

Today the process of industrial and community development is more complex. Experience has proved that, except in the largest cities, there is such a thing in the community as a point of saturation. Increasing the community population is not a simple expedient of inviting new industries to build there. Factories are built where there is a surplus of labor of a kind required by the particular industry. Steel mills are not established in a shoe manufacturing town, and vice versa. The industry must go to the labor supply for the labor surplus in this country is not so large that industry can place its thumb on it any place.

The community must build up its labor supply if it is to develop more industries and if it has a surplus of labor then the community must extend its industries. Community development is a scientific rather than a hit-or-miss process.

The CZARINA'S RUBIES

by Sidney Warwick

© 1931, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

READ THIS FIRST

Frank Severn has been kidnapped from his country home, Beggar's Court, where his lawyer, Felix Sant, takes charge. Jim Wynter and his friend Bill Grayson, search the place and find a hidden stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. They begin to suspect Sant of being in league with the kidnapers when a wall "accidentally" falls, blocking this door, and become convinced of it when they find in his desk an anonymous letter addressed to Wynter, which obviously had been held up because it gave warning that Sant was not to be trusted.

Grayson, his wife, Wynter and Katharine Faring take a house, Manorways, near Beggar's Court. Katharine is the rightful owner of the missing Czarina Rubies, by inheritance from her Russian grandfather, and Severn had tried to recover them for her.

Martin, Sant's servant, and a thug named Frome make a vain attempt to assassinate Wynter, and Grayson decides to ask a Scotland Yard detective for help. This is promised him. Wynter wonders if Severn's sketch of a fish and key in a letter to Katharine is a clue to the hiding place of the rubies.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER XLV

A fish with a key in its mouth. If a clue, it was far too exasperatingly obscure to convey any more meaning to him than it had done to Katharine. The only result of three minutes' hard concentrated thought was to corrugate Jim's brow with frowning wrinkles.

"Oh, damn!" he said suddenly. "I don't believe that damned fish means or was intended to mean anything. Just a leg-pull of Frank's—and that's all there is to it."

He dismissed it absolutely but not too easily from his mind and began the business of his morning toilet.

Milly was the only one late for breakfast—losing no time, as Jim remarked, in commencing her rest cure. Their stay at Manorways was to be no rest cure for Bill, who had to go on to town almost immediately after breakfast, and would not be back much before seven that evening. Jim motored him over to the neighboring town to catch the one last train, and spent the remaining hours till lunch time in the car with Katharine.

He spoke again of that intriguing fish. Somehow it haunted him. In spite of himself the possibility that it might be a clue persisted in recurring in his mind.

HAUNTING

"That blessed fish swam through my dreams all night," Jim told her. "Katharine, what if it should be a clue to those lost Czarina Rubies? I can't rid myself of a sort of hunch that it is—and that what was put in the letter as a jest has now suddenly become of serious and vital importance. If so, the fish constitutes the clue, of course, the key merely indicating the fact. Brilliant brain work that—but I'm afraid it doesn't get us much forward!" With a rueful grin.

"But what fish could there be at Monksilver?" Katharine asked helplessly.

"Well, there have been some very queer fish there lately—only not the kind of fish that Frank could mean!" he laughed. "Look here, Katharine, we'll run over to Monksilver. Once on the spot something might suggest itself. Pity we can't take Sant into our councils. Probably if I mentioned the word 'fish' to Sant, who knows Monksilver inside out, he'd dash unerringly to the spot with screams of joy. We can't manage it today unfortunately—but we'll go tomorrow and angle for that elusive fish! We've got to find those royal rubies of yours, Katharine—just got to!"

"I wish we could," Katharine sighed—and not only for my own selfish sake. I should hate to see to lose over your 'gamble,' as you call it, Jim."

"But what fish could there be at Monksilver?" Katharine asked helplessly.

"Oh, that little flutter of ours? Don't worry about that. Bless you, Milly, Bill and I are already counting on pouching our winnings!" Jim responded with a laugh. "As I haven't a doubt we shall, of course—even if Frank's weird fish should prove nothing more than a fish!"

UNSELFISH

But it was for Katharine's sake, not because of that two hundred and fifty of his and the Graysons' that represented the "flutter" in question, that Jim Wynter was devoutly hoping he might be a true prophet.

For Katharine's sake chiefly—but for other reasons too. In his mind was the thought of Federoff's devoted loyalty that had guarded those rubies when disaster and death had come winged to the house of Murinov . . . of that same unswerving loyalty that in more than ten years later, in his efforts to restore those priceless jewels to the last of the Murinov line, had cost Federoff his life—when he had died still guarding them. It might be, too, that Frank Severn's fate was bound up with those blood-red stones. . . . Intolerable to think of their sacrifices being in vain.

Yet though he had spoken with apparent confidence to Katharine, Jim knew but too well that probably her chance of ever recovering that gift from a royal house hung on only a slender thread—and whether they succeeded in getting Frank Severn out of those merciless hands alive. And that was on the knees of the gods.

Bill hoped to see Inspector Haste that day.

It was true they had found out far more than they could have reasonably hoped for in so short a time—thanks chiefly to luck and that unknown correspondent who seemed so determined to remain anonymous. But the difficulty was to get definite proof of their suspicions. That they were up against a problem calling for all the expert advice and help they could get both realized.

Possibly the key to the mystery lay behind that underground door in the ruins, that Sant had been so determined they should not open.

Sant had promised to have the debris that now blocked it cleared away—but had he any intention of keeping his promise? His policy would probably be to put them off by endless excuses and delays.

"And the devil of it is that we aren't in a position to force his hand," Jim reflected. "He's in authority at Beggar's Court, authority given by Severn—and he can please himself what he does."

Luncheon at Manorways was nearly over that morning when a boy from the postoffice handed in a telegram.

Jim tore the buff envelope open. It was from Bill Grayson:

"Inspector Haste keen as mustard. Things beginning to move."

INTRICATE PROBLEM

Jim Wynter read Bill's telegram with a sense of relief to know that Detective Inspector Haste's help had been enlisted. The handling of this intricate problem was altogether too big for a couple of amateurs to tackle, with Frank Severn's fate hanging in the balance.

"A wire from Bill—but nothing alarming, Milly. He doesn't want bailing out or anything of that sort!" Jim explained lightly. "Merely to say that Bill's seen a man on a matter of business I'm interested in."

If Milly were to know that they were consulting Inspector Haste about the Beggar's Court affair she might in all innocence mention that interesting fact to Sant.

But he spoke of it afterwards to Katharine, who already knew of their suspicion of Sant. Jim had taken her into his confidence when she had confirmed the suspicion that the letter supposedly from Severn might be a forgery.

Katharine had been less surprised at his news than he would have expected. From the first, she admitted now, she had not liked Sant, had been conscious of a vague unaccountable mistrust of this big smiling man. "But for the present we've got to act as though we suspected nary a thing, not let him have a hint," Bill had warned her. "That's why Bill decided it was best Milly should know nothing yet. Milly's one of the best going—o-gly keeping state secrets isn't her strong suit!"

Trojans Facing T'rashing

By HARDIN BURNLEY

© 1931, King Features Syndicate, Inc. Great Britain rights reserved.

If Southern California should turn the tables when it meets Notre Dame next Saturday, it would be almost as great an upset as was the 27-0 score by which Frank Carideo and his mates won last year. For weeks one has heard comment anent the marvelous "Fighting Irish" this year, and the aptitude with which Coach "Hunk" Anderson has filled the finest pair of shoes that ever left their imprint on the gridiron turf. And during those same weeks there have been tales of the tremendous scoring punch packed by the Trojans, of the All-America calibre of half a dozen of their mighty men, etc., etc. But the fact remains that while the Ramblers have exhibited consistent championship football since the beginning of the season, Howard Jones' warriors have not. On some afternoons against first class opposition they have appeared quite unstoppable and on others the Trojans have been just an ordinary first flight football team. Last year when these two teams met in what was conceded all over the country to be the epic of the 1930 season the situation was very similar. After an early seasonal defeat by the narrowest of margins, U. S. C. began to steamroller all opposition, seemingly picking up power as the season progressed.

At the same time the Ramblers had compiled an amazingly impressive string of unbroken victories. When game time approached Rockne was unusually lugubrious, and thousands of Coast fans were glad to bet 2 to 1 and 10 to 6 on the Trojans. But Carideo, O'Connor, Schwartz & Co. went on a rampage that was checked only by the final whistle, and that 27-0 Notre Dame triumph.

Saturday's battle should be much less one-sided. Indeed, Mohler, Shaver and Pinkert, et al may manage to eke out a victory which will atone in part for that mortifying 1930 defeat.
